Activities in 2021:

During the pandemic year 2021, the section was involved in different activities, especially in September 2021, when:

- The edited book Digital Roots. Historicizing Media and Communication Concepts of the Digital Age (edited by Gabriele Balbi, Nelson Ribeiro, Valérie Schafer and Christian Schwarzenegger) was published by De Gruyter. This book is a long-term effort of the section started at least in 2018 and it involves several members. All the chapters are in open access and it received a lot of attention in the academic community of communication and media historians;
- The postponed EEC Conference in Braga happened. 6 panels plus the business meeting (where the new management team was elected) were allocated to the section and all were held through Zoom. For an overview of the panels, see here.
- Immediately after the end of the general conference, the section co-organized with two other ECREA sections (Radio and Sound and Television Studies) a joint post-conference entitled Old Media Persistence. The one day online symposium, held on Webex, was very interesting and engaging with several scholars from different world regions. To check the program see here. A special issue of SCOMS on this topic will be published by 2023, so far a call for paper is out.

Plans for 2022:

In 2022, the section will have two main key moments:

- The workshop History of Digital Media and Digital Media Historiography, co-sponsored by the ICA Communication History Division, and hosted by the Centre for Contemporary and Digital History (C²DH), University of Luxembourg, 2-4 February. This will be an hybrid event and for more information see the program here.
- The ECC 2022 conference in Aarhus will be a second crucial gathering for the section's members, hopefully in person. In order to attract more submissions, the management team has released a specific call: see <https://conferences.au.dk/ecrea2022/call-for-papers/>. The section is also sponsoring two preconferences

- The Transformation of Public Dissent: From Counter-Publics Spheres and Alternative Media to Disinformation Ecologies?, held on 6-7 October, 2022
- A second one is still in negotiations and will be jointly organized by COH section and International and Intercultural communication section. The call will be out by March 2022.
